Free Download Realtime Blackjack Rakeback for Mac Full Crack. Dual antiplatelet therapy in left ventricular assist device recipients: Is it necessary? Left ventricular assist devices (LVADs) have become an important therapeutic option for patients with advanced heart failure. Dual antiplatelet therapy is suggested to be indicated to reduce the risk of thrombotic complications in LVAD patients. A retrospective analysis of all patients implanted with LVADs (LVAD Group) and a control group of patients implanted with permanent pacemaker (PM Group) was performed. Antiplatelet therapy and heparin were equally used in LVAD and PM Group. Platelet count and Clauss method were equally used for assessing thrombocytopenia. Major bleeding events were defined as events needing blood transfusion or surgery, and minor bleeding events as events that did not require transfusion or surgery. Between January 2013 and December 2015, 46 LVAD patients (21 females) and 65 PM patients (36 females) were implanted. The mean age of the LVAD Group was 52.5 ± 14.3 years, and of the PM Group was 49.3 ± 16.7 years ($p = 0.41$). The cumulative 1-year mortality rate was 36.1% in LVAD Group and 12.3%
