The present invention relates generally to an information reproducing apparatus for reproducing information recorded on a recording medium, and more particularly to an apparatus for reproducing information recorded on a recording medium such as a magneto-optic disk or the like. In recent years, as an optical disk is highly compressed to be stored in the form of optical disks, a development of an optical disk apparatus for reproducing information recorded on such a highly compressed optical disk is progressing. As such an optical disk apparatus, the applicant of the present invention has proposed an optical information recording/reproducing system as shown in FIG. 1. In the system, an optical disk 1 which has a magneto-optic recording medium is rotated by a spindle motor 2, so that in the optical disk 1, a necessary track (track 1 through track 36) is selected and information data recorded in this track is read. An optical head 3 is provided in an optical pickup which is arranged coaxially with the optical disk 1. The optical head 3 comprises a laser diode 3a for generating a laser beam, a collimator lens 3b for converting the generated laser beam from the laser diode 3a into parallel light, a collimator lens 3c for converting the converted light from the collimator lens 3b into circular light, and an objective lens 3d which converges the converted light on the optical disk 1. An aperture diaphragm 4 is provided between the optical head 3 and the objective lens 3d and controls a quantity of a light beam received by

An adaptation of the Cambridge prototype for assessing cognitive status in the long-term care environment. The purpose of this study was to examine the psychometric properties of the Cambridge Prototype for Cognitive Status (CAPSCS) in a sample of long-term care facility clients, as well as to identify the cognitive domains that contribute the greatest variance in scores. The CAPSCS is a 30-item, indirect observation-based questionnaire originally designed for clinical settings. The measure was administered to a group of 196 long-term care facility clients and was found to be reliable (coefficient alpha = .79). All participants in this study had an advanced illness and needed assistance with activities of daily living. Significant relationships were found between the CAPSCS and the domains of memory, executive functioning, language, and comprehension. The CAPSCS appears to provide a useful tool to measure cognition in a heterogeneous sample of long-term care facility clients. The ability to detect cognitive changes over time, coupled with the relatively short administration time (10 min) and low respondent burden, makes this measure well suited to cognitive monitoring in the long-term care setting. Q: passing the value of input as a parameter to a state I'm trying to make an application where I have a form where the user inputs a name, a surname and a Age, all 3 values are parameters that I want to pass to a state, so far I have made a function which takes the user input and gives me the value and the Age as a parameter:

//js const name = ""; const surname = ""; const age = ""; const changeName = (event) => { const name = event.target.value; const age = parseInt(event.target.value); console.log(name); console.log(age); } and I have a setState function //js export default class App extends Component { constructor() { 0cc13bf012

Q: C# TextBox replacement while typing I have a TextBox which replaces words from dictionary:

class Vocab { private readonly IDictionary dict = new Dictionary(); public string GetVocab(string s) { if (dict.ContainsKey(s)) return dict[s]; else return string.Empty; } }

 How can I make TextBox replace word when typing? I don't want to perform regular expression which I would have to write for every word in the TextBox. A: You can use IDictionary as source for the TextBox. See example in this blog post. For your case, I would suggest to write some helper method instead of the whole dictionary. For example, you could have a dictionary of words (or: list of words) and a dictionary of synonyms (

A new site will be launched for this and for all other campaign's actions: www.liberticida.eu In his inaugural address, President Obama offered an implicit warning of where the United States stands in the wake of more than a year of chaos abroad, terrorism at home and the worst financial crisis in 80 years. "We are made for this moment," the president said. "We can be defined by the risks we take, or we can be defined by the risks we refuse to take." Coming here from the White House on Tuesday, the president turned his first televised address to the nation into a soaringly optimistic defense of the values and institutions that have long made the United States stronger. He extolled the power of the presidency and of the laws that are the foundation of the American government, asserting that law makes citizens proud and encourages private enterprise. The best of Vincenzo Grifo was a book I picked up because it looked interesting. Originally published in Italy and translated by the inimitable Joe Barrett. I'm Italian and like to think myself good at picking up on cultural differences, but even I was a bit confused at times. The plot is a human-looking centaur, or half-horse, half-man, who despite the limitations of the body, rises from the low-class, amazon environment he was born in to become a respected political leader. There is also a mysterious object, a kind of time-travel device, that fits
