Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a system and method for improving the efficiency of a transmission system. More particularly, the present invention relates to a system and method for improving the efficiency of a transmission system to compensate for the delay in carrier or clock signals used to transmit data in the transmission system. 2. Description of the Related Art In a synchronous network, data is transmitted in the form of a series of data frames between two electronic devices. The data frames may be transmitted on one of a number of different carrier signals. Specifically, a clock signal known as a xe2x80x9ccarrierxe2x80x9d or xe2x80x9cclockxe2x80x9d signal may be transmitted with the data frames. A clock signal is a signal that occurs continuously and which can be used to tell the difference between a xe2x80x9c1xe2x80x9d and a xe2x80x9c0xe2x80x9d, for example. The data frames may be transmitted on one or more of four different clock signals. Four clock signals are often used in a Synchronous Optical NETwork (SONET) systems, for example. SONET is an acronym for Synchronous Optical NETwork, which is an American National Standards Institute (ANSI) standard that sets forth a synchronous transmission standard for digital optical networks. Many times, the sequence of data frames transmitted between two electronic devices is not completely continuous. Therefore, if only one of the four clock signals is used, it may not be possible to use the clock signal to detect the order of data frames. However, using one of the four clock signals is sometimes problematic in systems that use the clock signal to recover the data frames transmitted on the carrier signal. In such systems, a time base is needed to synchronize the data frames to a receiver. In order to achieve synchronization, the receiver determines when data should be received. The receiver xe2x80x9cseesxe2x80x9d the carrier signal 0cc13bf012
