Trading cards, or trading cards, also known as trading cards or atlases, are plastic or cardboard playing cards or matchbooks that feature images of one or more professional or semi-pro sports players or cartoon characters. They are played on a pack of cards in a collectible card game (CCG) similar to Magic: The Gathering and Yu-Gi-Oh!. Each card is identified by a number (typically from one to six, and sometimes eight), a picture and a textual description. The owner of the card is identified by a symbol and a number (usually a player's nickname or jersey number, or the name of the player's team, e.g. Mike Trout #42). The game is a member of the trading-card game genre. The card's price is often determined by the supply and demand forces of the various card marketplaces. These marketplaces can range from electronic games to bookstalls in shopping malls, as well as in the Internet or telephone ordering services offered by various companies or retail stores, such as The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company in the United States, and WHSmith in the United Kingdom. The card's value can also vary because of its physical condition, the scarcity of the print run, and the exclusivity of the license.[3] Several real world collectible card games rely on this model, such as Magic: The Gathering, Yu-Gi-Oh!, Pokémon Trading Card Game, and Cards Against Humanity. Origin: Trading Cards were created in Japan in 1990. They were an idea conceived by Tsunekazu Ishihara (石原 徹也). The first trading card game set was the Trading Card Game (also known as the "TCG" for short), which was published and released by Tsunekazu Ishihara in 1990. The game had a few cards in it, but it was mainly used as a promotional product. Much like a 'business card', trading cards may have various printing variations, some cards may have different spelling and formats, others may have various mottos. Aside from traditional printings, trading cards may have a holographic sticker, foil, embossing, gold foil, plastic or 'regular' card. The first trading card game in English was the Magic: The Gathering c9d1549cdd

\ Nervous tension of heart/mind, or too high (exaggerated) anxiety. Reduction of Tension: Tancement. The Tension produced in the System may be due to physical exhaustion; hence the necessity of giving attention to the steadiness of the

mechanism and to the gravity of the conditions that produced it. These things are covered in detail under the later sections. The system requires attention in many ways. 1) ATTENTION TO THE MECHANISM All of the open joints must be made firm and tight. The tongue must be made tight. Excess saliva must be removed from the mouth. (If the system is relaxed there is no saliva and the tongue will be lax.) The sound of the breath must be made single and steady. Relaxed breathing will result in some irregularity of sound. It is necessary to count the breath before each inhalation and the outbreath. (Metron is learned by mentally counting by breath.) The nostrils must be kept open. Breathing through the mouth is probably always possible, but is probably not advisable to beginners because of difficulty in controlling the muscles of the mouth and throat. Larynx, neck, bosom, diaphragm, abdomen must be kept firm and tight. The blood and lymph must be in rhythm with every breath. This means, 1) to sit up straight in all postures; and 2) to breathe slowly and normally. Work with the exhalation. Inhalation is a putting away or pushing away from of something. The system is put away during exhalation, and is cleared during inhalation. Exhalation is the running away of something. As I empty out I empty other people through me. Don't push me out of your system, I'll come back home. * Time of day and time of year are important. In the morning time is precious. You should approach your practice in the morning. Lamentations come in the morning. When tired the problems of life are with you, and you need all the time you have. You can't divert yourself to hear your breath as though it were your marbles popping a balloon in your hand. You must take time in the morning to remember you are breathing, thinking, feeling. At night your place is different. You are on your ease. You have to relax, but you also have to be more alert. Can you count? Think your breathing is in rhythm? He who
