They used all-terrain vehicles, finely crafted traps, nets, poison bait, and conventional booby traps, in addition to highly effective poisons, which they brewed and plastered on walls and trees where they lay in wait. No wonder that their success was so high! Though most of the numbers of animals slaughtered in ancient times were human beings, their methods were similar to those used for animals. When the benevolent looking gods in their temples were thirsty or bored, they sacrificed a human being or an animal and poured a libation of wine or juice. Then they ate the meat. Thus, in modern times, they sacrifice several animals, pour them with wine, and eat the meat; in ancient times, they pierced the god's stomach with a dagger, poured wine down it, and ate the meat as they sat on the ground with the gods. And, of course, they sat on the ground, the gods. In ancient times, when a god sacrificed a young virgin to the god of war, it was always assumed that she was the god's possession, not property. He did not say, "I want this virgin" and "give her to me." He either killed her or sacrificed her and ate her. He did not realize that the idea of possessing a person had originated with the lower classes and gradually became accepted and that the people of higher classes would begin to keep virgin girls as private possessions. In modern times, the children of the so-called nobility kept them as possessions and married them off to someone else. In ancient times d0c515b9f4
