Khan: Published on September 02., Q: Is it acceptable to have the "minimum number of posts" option select list depend on the post count threshold? Can we please have the minimum number of posts selection depend on the current post count threshold? For example, the current post count threshold is 10, but I want to always show the first selection in the post count selection drop downlist (the one showing more than 1000 or so), and the second in the 2nd-10th range. Is there any way to make the drop down depend on the post count threshold? Thanks! A: Can we please have the minimum number of posts selection depend on the current post count threshold? Probably not. To quote the wordpress codex on that exact topic: If you want to use the search form, you'll usually want to specify the minimum posts search, which is the minimum number of posts in your query. Otherwise, users can hit enter and load the results for a single post, which doesn't give them much information and means they can't easily find out if their search results

Urotensin II is a neurohypophysial peptide with potent vasoconstrictor and diuretic activity. We examined urotensin II in the rat testis, epididymis and epididymal fluid using a specific radioimmunoassay. Urotensin II was detected in both the testis and epididymis with identical chromatographic properties to those of porcine urotensin II. Immunohistochemical study showed that urotensin II is present within the vas deferens, ampullarytubular junction and epididymal duct and that the epithelium of caput epididymis and vas deferens stained intensely. Urotensin II is also secreted into the lumen of the cauda epididymis, vas deferens and penile urethra. Western blot analysis demonstrated a single immunoreactive band at a molecular weight of 12 kDa. However, a band of a greater molecular weight, 20-24 kDa was also detected in rat serum. The immunocytochemical staining was abolished by peptide epitope masking. Scatchard plot analysis showed a single class of high-affinity binding sites for urotensin II in testis and vas deferens, and two classes of binding sites, a single class of low-affinity binding sites and another of high-affinity binding sites in cauda epididymis and penile urethra. These results suggest that urotensin II may be involved in the regulation of fluid secretion by the testes and epididymis through its vascular effects and that it may be expressed in the corpus and cauda epididymis and
