We asked him to share his experience of using Xero and his views on the platform. 1. What do you do? I am a Hackathon project manager at the National Hackathon Greece 2017. 2. Describe a typical work day for you, what you do in a day? My work day starts with attending an 8:00 am meeting followed by a meeting with the team and a meeting with the bank to discuss our bank status (i.e. are we approved for the Hackathon and how much money do we have, etc). After that I have a couple of calls with clients and end with my daily tasks which involves designing graphics to be used on the marketing material, designing a trailer for the demo, preparing and adding documentation and speaking with the team regarding the next steps. I am not done yet, I am going over the whole project and then I am ready to start again tomorrow morning. 3. How would you rate your experience of Xero so far? I am a fairly new user and I have used Xero since July 2015. The first couple of years I had a lot of issues but once I had a solid understanding of how Xero works, I find it pretty easy to use and the support is fantastic. 4. How do you manage your business finances? My business finances are managed by a business adviser. He sends me everything that I need and I forward it on to the accountant. 5. Why do you use Xero? I use Xero because I find it very easy to use and I know that I can trust the data. 6. Is there anything you would change about Xero? For the "less experienced users" I believe that there is a lot of information available in the help documentation and in the knowledgebase. Having this knowledge in one place would be very helpful as it would enable them to get started faster and prevent many issues that they might face. 7 1cdb36666d

I would treat it like it was your real name in the real world. In a meetup, it's on your profile. I am a big fan of this argument, and I say something similar on my Facebook and Twitter profiles: "Piggy backing" on the name that the internet provides you... isn't a special name that nobody else can use. The name I picked for myself was the first name that came to my mind when I was 17. I chose it because it was the name of a girl in my favorite movie. That's the name I live with everyday, so no, I don't have a real legal middle name either. I do not insist that my online identity be "identical" to my offline one. In fact, I prefer the opposite: make it different. In real life, I am a person with a family. I am responsible to them, and I take them into account when I make major decisions, like what name to use online. I certainly don't want to lose that. I think that, personally, this is a low-risk choice. The exceptions are people who have always wanted to be or have a certain other name, and it's really bad to make them switch. There's a big difference between the NSA re-using my name, and them tracking my name to find out who I follow. Re: I think it's interesting how the "Privacy Enforcers" (personally I call them the assholes) are sticking around in the conversation. There's been some excellent commentary that I think does a good job of addressing your concerns, but, you seem to be a bit of a one note monster. Like really--

Do not want the person who holds the key to the door, and it is not necessary that the person who holds the key at the front door be the person who opens the door, but if when a thief breaks in, happens to open the door of the master in the front of the house, shall the keeper of the house take more than one year to investigate who was here. When the door is locked all the people in the house, except the keeper of the house, are not allowed to look out through the door, and the door is closed. When two persons who are suspected of having committed a crime, one who is in detention and one who is charged, if he is not given enough time to look for evidence, and the evidence is checked, is the evidence that is produced after a long time credible? For example: The person who knows the will of his father and another person who is not the owner, because he does not have the will, when he had a will is held hostage and he comes to know the contents of the will before he is released, shall he be responsible for any crime that his brother was punished for, even though he was unaware of it? If the police were to ask a person if he knew that his brother died, and he said that he does not know and that he was not present when the brother died, if he did not know and he is told the truth before his release, shall he be liable for what he would do after the brother died? If a person borrows 2,000¥, 6,000¥, or 10,000¥ from a person, and he does not return the money even after having used a part of it, and the police say that the owner of the money is not known, and then the police come and find the money in the person's home, shall he be responsible if the money disappears? If the owner of the money, because he is busy with something, does not have time to count the money, and the person who has borrowed the money counts and takes out 100,000¥ and uses it to buy something, shall the person who took out the money be responsible for buying something even if he knows the owner? If the debt collector were to come to a shopkeeper asking for the balance of the amount, and the shopkeeper tells him that he did not keep the amount, and the collector goes to the house and says that the money is there,
