The binding of thrombin to the surface of double-stranded DNA-protein nucleoprotein complexes, such as nucleosomes, is in vitro reversible and leads to thrombin inhibition. In the present study, we analyzed the interaction of thrombin with a double-stranded nucleosome containing the "linker" region of histone H5. The extent of the nucleosome binding was determined by radiolabeled thrombin binding, electrophoretic mobility shift, and DNase I footprinting. The results showed that the "linker" region of histone H5 is required for thrombin-nucleosome binding. We also demonstrated that thrombin binding to nucleosomes abolishes the DNase I activity of micrococcal nuclease. Our results suggest that thrombin can inhibit the DNase I activity of micrococcal nuclease by interacting with nucleosomes and stabilizing their structure.Role of protein kinase C and the cAMP-dependent cyclic AMP response element binding protein in adenosine prevention, diagnosis, and treatment Heartworm infection is a life-threatening parasitic disease that is caused by heartworms (Dirofilaria immitis) in dogs. It is a zoonotic disease (a disease of animals) and is transmitted between dogs and mosquitoes through mosquito bites. Dogs with the infection may have no signs of disease and may not be able to exercise, or they may be very lethargic, weak, or even suddenly die. If an adult does not detect a mosquito bite or if a dog becomes lethargic or weak, your veterinarian should be consulted. A normal adult heartworm pup in the fourth stage of a larval heartworm infection develops into an adult heartworm about three weeks after reaching the second larval stage. The maximum size of an adult heartworm is about 0.5 inch (13 mm) long and appears like a dark speck when you touch its head. A mosquito must bite your dog and an adult male heartworm must be present to infect the mosquito. Canine heartworm may be present in any part of the heart, but it is most commonly found in the pulmonary trunk or around the base of the ventricles. This area, where the pulmonary vein enters the heart, creates an ideal environment for the heartworm to survive. An infected female heartworm produces thousands of microscopic embryos in the heart. These tiny heartworms begin developing in the heart and may enter the blood circulation. Canine heartworm infection can occur from first to sixth stage larvae (L1-L6) within the mosquitoes' lifetimes. Several mosquitoes may transmit heartworm to a dog during a lifetime. Vector There are two types of mosquito that can infect dogs, and transmission occurs primarily in the south-central and south-eastern United States. For the purposes of this article, only the first type, the common American dog mosquito, will be discussed in detail. Female mosquito bores into the dog's skin at the base of the tail. American dog mosquito with a blue-colored abdomen Mosquitoes usually gain entry into the dog's body via the dog's ears (flap a mosquito away from your dog's ears), tails (flap a mosquito away from your dog's tail), or legs (bend dog's leg to get in). Most female mosquito bites are caused by a dog's ears. How a female mosquito gets to a dog's ears is not fully understood, but it is likely the insect
