. "Red is on the north side, blue on the south side, and yellow is going directly east, then west." "The only thing we can do is set the blue and red mankins on top." "And put the yellow mankins on the bottom." "Do you know what a mankin is?" "No, I don't." "You ever worked in construction?" "Yes, I have." "I thought you did." "A mankin is, uh, essentially a top hat, for masons, where they drop it between two triangles on top of a line." "When you do that, in a 10-point wall, you've got about six inches that you want to cut off with a diamond saw, so a diamond blade comes down and chops the top piece off." "Now, it's a diamond blade." "I suppose you could do it with a regular mason's blade." "But the diamond is the cutting stone." "So, you have to go and get the diamond from downtown." "It's very difficult to do." "That's why you use the diamond." "Hey." "In the meantime, we've got to start the mankin." "I'm going in with the fag-nibbler." "All right." "When we get the diamond, it'll come up like this." "Pull it up on the one side, and then come right down and hit the dead line." "And then it goes up the other side." "There you go." "That's it." "Let's see what we got." "There's eight diamonds." "We're good." "Hey." "Hook up the diamond." "This one, right here." "Oh, man." "All right, get the diamond." "I think we're good." "We've got to put that diamond in." "I don't know what to do." "We're in over our heads." "Do you know what a diamond trowel is?" "Yeah, yeah." "They're thin with a pointed..." "How many diamonds do you need to put in a wall, right?" "If I had a fag-nibbler, I could put it in in about four minutes." "So if you want to do it the right way, you can do it in half an hour, and I'll show you how to do it." "Okay." "Come on in." "Let's do it." "It's going to

What's New in the?

Two years ago, we gave the MBTA high marks for upgrading how it runs its trains. Today, there are still some bugs in the MBTA's automated system to be fixed, but so far, it seems the system is working pretty well. Some riders are a little confused about the train arrangements, however, so we took a ride on the Commuter Rail out to Framingham on Friday afternoon to see how it works in practice. Here's what we found. Eight trains Until recently, commuter rail has run two sets of tracks. One is for the Commuter Rail, one for the T's heavy rail lines, but now there are 8 trains running in each direction. On the new lines, 16 cars are attached to each train and most of the cars are full. The commuter rail trains are much more crowded, with the aisles packed with passengers standing. There are eight cars in each train. That's all well and good, but there is one jarring inconsistency when it comes to train numbers. There are cars 1 and 5 with the following signs: Card: Commuter Rail Car: 8 Car number: 8 Train number: 3250 Car number: 1 Card: Commuter Rail Car: 8 Car number: 8 Train number: 3240 The gap between cars 5 and 8 is why cars 1 and 5 do not have "8" across their cards. This is how it shows up on the MBTA's website: It doesn't make much sense, but a lot of people will get confused when they arrive at a station and see a line of 8-seats-per-car headed their way on a northbound train. But here's the thing. We only ever saw one train operating out to Framingham on Friday, so we didn't get the chance to ride that train. We got on the train going out to Worcester at Framingham, which arrived at the station on time, did not run late, and did not use back up engines. The next train from Framingham to Worcester arrived 15 minutes late, and the next one, a half-hour later than usual, so there may be some growing pains still. Four in a row on commuter rail When the Commuter Rail and Regional Transit Authority expanded last year, the new lines brought a much-needed change in train patterns. The old system of
