Related Background Art In a conventional power transmission apparatus, as disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,427,088, a powder metal must be set in a die of a metal mold, the powder metal is compression molded together with a molded piece in the die and then the powder metal is removed from the mold. However, the above conventional power transmission apparatus has a problem that molding takes a long time because the molded piece is compressed in the metal mold by the action of the powder metal on the die while it is set in the die. The invention has been made in view of the above problems and it is therefore an object of the invention to improve the compression moldability in a power transmission apparatus. To attain the above object, according to a first aspect of the invention, there is provided a power transmission apparatus comprising: a housing; a driving shaft disposed in the housing; a pulley rotatably disposed on the driving shaft; a pinion shaft disposed in the housing; a first groove formed in the pinion shaft; a pulley mounted on the pinion shaft; a second groove formed in the pinion shaft; a shaft sleeve portion in which the pinion shaft and the shaft portion are inserted; a tapered bearing portion to which the shaft sleeve portion is fitted; a washer for pressure fitted in the tapered bearing portion; a connecting pin; and a nut threadedly engaged with the connecting pin and press-fitted into the bearing portion to position the washer. According to a second aspect of the invention, the power transmission apparatus may further comprise a viscosity-controlled oil valve. According to a third aspect of the invention, the washer may be a ball-shaped washer. According to a fourth aspect of the invention, the washer may be a semi-spherical washer. According
